Book summary

I was department manager at a global corporation when the acquisition of a competitor was announced. We didn't anticipate the monster that was lurking behind the corner when a year of reorganizations, layoffs and conflicts started. When it was time for Christmas leave the mess had taken its toll, I was put on sick leave for exhaustion syndrome, or more popularly put, I was burned out. The way back with using photography as therapy, a photo workshop with a big impact on my photography, competition successes - it all comes together in the book In the twilight zone.

Preface written by famous photographer

The preface is written by well-known nature and art photographer Mats Andersson, who also designed the book. In the preface he writes "An image emanating melancholy. Fictional, or possibly some sort of self-portrait? A saddened puffin in the foreground is looking at a group of people appearing as dark, ghostlike silhouettes. Is the sad bird and the photographer one and the same - someone in the process of excluding others. The image touches me and provokes thought. To me this is what good photography is all about."
